

Library Instruction Assessment

1. The most efficient way to find academic or scholarly journal articles on the topic of climate change is to:
  - Look through print or electronic encyclopedias
  - Search the library's online journal article databases
  - Use an internet search engine, such as Google or Ask.com
  - Search the Library of Congress website
  - None of the above

2. A "citation" is:
  - The list of index words in the back of a book
  - The name of author and date of publication of a book or article cited in the text of another article or book
  - Is the detailed description of a chapter in a book
  - Is the university affiliation of the author of the book or scientific article
  - None of the above

3. An "abstract" is:
  - An excerpt from the full text of a book or article
  - An MP3 file
  - A summary of the content in a journal article or dissertation
  - A concept of concrete existence
  - None of the above

4. You can access the library's online catalog (OPAC) to find information on:
  - Books
  - Electronic books
  - Reserve books
  - All of the above
  - None of the above

5. A "reference list" or "works cited" page
  - Includes sources cited in a book or an article
  - Allows you to locate additional sources on a topic
  - Allows you to locate works cited in that book or article
  - All of the above
  - None of the above

Please continue on back page

6. It is acceptable not to cite a source if
- The author is dead
  - The author is a corporate author
  - There are multiple authors
  - None of the above
  - All of the above
7. Which three areas are most important to consider when evaluating a website to use as a reference in an academic research paper?
- Navigation, structure, and format of the website
  - Authority, purpose, and currency of the website
  - Layout, graphics, and publisher of the website
  - Bias, integrity, and cost of the website
  - None of the above.
8. A scholarly, peer-reviewed journal
- Includes advertising for consumer products
  - Publishes articles written by scholars and reviewed by experts in that field
  - Is located in the reference section of the library
  - Is a scholar's diary
  - None of the above
9. A "magazine"
- Publishes articles of interest to a non-academic audience
  - Usually includes advertising
  - May be published weekly, monthly, or bi-monthly
  - All of the above
  - None of the above
10. The "call number" of a book
- Is the number to order/purchase a book online
  - Is the number bookstores use to identify a book
  - Is used to locate the book on the library's shelves
  - Is the phone number of the author/publisher
  - None of the above